

Fernando Quijano
ECON 201
8:30
Fall 2005
16 Students

The computer system is very useful, but it does not work all of the time. I still can't get into my one key page, therefore I am unable to use the online practice exams & another student has to print them out for me. The instructor goes a little too fast. The concept of Economics is a hard one to grasp & he should make sure that all students understand it before moving on.

The class is not a slack class, you have to study and do your home work to understand the material. It was too easy to get lost in this class, the instructor should break down the term more so the students can understand better.

I felt that this class was too challenging for a 201 level course. For students that have never had any kind of instruction in economics, this class was too complicated. He covered the material too quickly and made his tests ridiculously difficult. Even after reading and outlining each chapter. And missing fewer than 3 classes, I struggled in this class. However, the instructor did make the class entertaining and provided good information overall. I suggest that he slow down when teaching and review more for tests.

I believe that our homework assignments should be counted as a grade by itself. Not tied into our tests.

He had websites that helped a little.

I think the instructor used a variety of ways to teach, although he was very challenging and hard to understand at times. It was sometimes hard for him to get the information threw to us.

I think that if we could work in groups more on tests it would be helpful, because some concepts are hard to understand unless you have multiple people giving ideas.

The instructor knows his material very well. The tests are pretty hard. It is nice to have the formulas for tests to make it easier like when we have take home tests. He was very helpful when I was out sick for about two weeks in getting back on track. His visuals were very helpful along with descriptions of them.

Well I feel like there was a love hate relationship between the class. He was a good instructor but at times I disliked him. His tests are very hard. Though he did give us take home tests and 1 make-up exam.

I really liked Mr. Quijano's attitude, he really wants his students to learn. He also takes the time to show many opportunities how to improve your knowledge, Quizzes, web pages, ect! My only complaint, he is so good at his Job he doesn't know How to come down to a beginners level. The Questions Asked, the vocabulary used. But over all He was a fun teacher!
